

World Day Against Child Labour

When we talk about child labour, poverty is often seen as the main reason. But there is another reality that often goes unnoticed. Many children with developmental challenges, especially learning disabilities, are pushed closer to child labour when they are excluded from education and denied the support they need.

Every year, children who struggle with reading, writing, attention, or learning are labelled as "weak" or "unable to study." As they grow older, some are denied admission to higher classes or encouraged to leave school because they do not fit into the traditional system. Slowly, their dreams begin to fade. When a child loses the opportunity to learn, the risk of being pushed into work increases.

The tragedy is that these children are not incapable of learning—they simply learn differently. What they need is understanding, patience, and support. Instead, many face rejection, low expectations, and exclusion.

Protecting children from labour means more than enforcing laws. It means ensuring quality education for every child, protecting children's rights, creating inclusive schools, and supporting vulnerable families. No child should be forced to give up their education because they learn differently.

At TIMRT, we believe that every child can learn and succeed when given the right support. Through personalized education, individualized intervention plans, and the dedicated efforts of our expert multidisciplinary team, we help children with developmental challenges, especially learning disabilities, discover their strengths and achieve their potential. By addressing each child's unique needs and working closely with families and schools, TIMRT strives to ensure that no child is left behind and that more children in and around our community can remain in education, build confidence, and move towards a brighter future.

Every child deserves an opportunity to succeed. With the right guidance, support, and inclusive educational practices, we can transform challenges into achievements and protect children from the risks of exclusion and child labour.
